SAFETY NEWS

Safety action for the week: Drive Ahead!!

A distracted driver is a dangerous driver.

Why? As you drive, most of your attention should be focused ahead of you, where your car will be in a few seconds. You need to constantly watch out for driving conditions and the actions of other drivers. Anything that seriously distracts you from the road ahead puts you and those around you in danger.

And we are talking about the attention of both your eyes and your brain. It is not enough to look ahead of you; your brain must be engaged on driving as well.

3 Kinds of Distracted Driving

The NHTSA Website identifies three types of distracted driving.

- visual, taking your eyes off of the road
- manual, taking your hands off of the wheel
- mental, letting your mind wander

Which of the three is the most prevalent — or the most dangerous — is largely a matter of opinion, but they are all risky. A moving car with a distracted driver is basically a missile aimed at pretty much anything.

In a study by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), 80% of all collisions were blamed on drivers engaged in distracting activities. The study determined that the most common distraction for drivers was using a cell phone while driving, and the number of crashes while dialing a number was roughly equivalent with the number of crashes while the driver was talking or listening.

Stay safe. Stay aware. Stay clean.

Until next week,

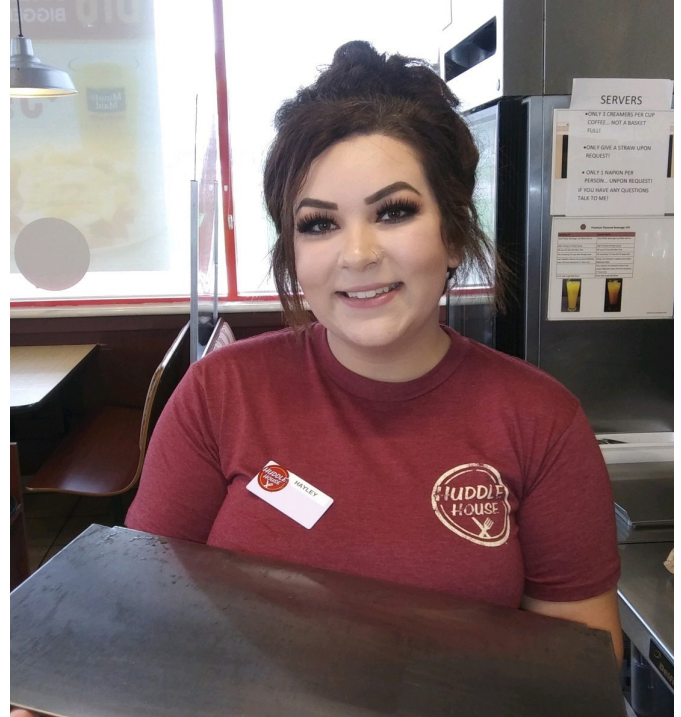

The Safety Guy
